

You have conducted a survey about which media source is the most useful for teenagers for news and entertainment during quarantine. (land phones, cell phones, TV, magazines, the internet, etc.) After you have compiled your data, you are asked to report your findings to our class. You can use a graph or pie chart to illustrate the information on each media type.

Below is a pie chart that illustrates the distribution of teenagers' media preferences:

The internet and cell phones were the most useful sources for teenagers during quarantine, thanks to their interactive and high-tech features. Meanwhile, traditional media like TV, magazines, and landlines played a smaller role. This data highlights the growing reliance on modern technological means for entertainment and staying informed, emphasizing the need for widespread internet access and digital literacy to support lifelong learning and social connectivity.
